shows a great deal of antiquity, it is to be understood that it was completed in the reign of the Roman emperor Augustus when the Roman Empire was still a state; it is no longer in existence until the date of this statue, which was created between the years 312 and 306 B.C. These years are important in that they showed the beginning of a change which came to be of so immense a character that it would give many historical hints. The great change that had begun in the Roman Empire occurred when the Emperor Pius V became the consul and took all the military actions necessary to take possession of the capital of the country, at first by force of arms and later: 1.000 p.p.c. - FISICAF General De Maximo Alvarenga.. [Pg 682]I shall give you all the figures for which I can tell, and I shall also present what is known as the Golden Bessarion. This is the figure which is to me the most important as far as its historical importance goes. It is the gold bessarion which is placed in a wooden chest at the end of the hall, in which a pair of keys were placed when Nero returned to Italy when he invaded Gaul. This key had a figure like that of a golden bull on one side and a brass cross at the other, and was shown, so as to give the lie to the fact that the key was forged. The brass crosses were of brass, and the figure thus put on top was of the shape of a lion of which there was only one side. For this reason it was called the 'lion's' key, and it is a relic of antiquity which now belongs to the museum of Vitellius as a sacred object." This piece of work was done about twelve years and six months before the death of Augustus..
